A NOTE FROM THE DIRECTOR

Shadowlands lives at the intersection of pain and joy.

When the play begins, we see C.S. Lewis as a man confident in his studied ideas about the meaning of suffering in the world. However, his settled middle-aged life is absent both romantic love and the pain that such love risks.

Then Joy walks in. And over the course of the play she upends everything. She is the engine that makes him rethink love, suffering and faith. Suddenly his confident, intellectual ideas are tested by his new experiences, and he becomes more alive. His suffering spurs doubt but also fuels an evolution that moves him into a kind of peace with the unanswerable. He steps further out of the shadows.

It takes courage to give up all your safety. Lewis learned to dive the summer he became a Christian. As the Lewis character says in BBC's Through the Shadowlands, "You don't have to do anything. All you have to do is stop doing something; you have to learn to stop trying to preserve yourself. Once you let yourself go head first without worrying where you're going to land...you're a diver." It's this stepping away from self-preservation that allows him to dive into joy, and thus into suffering too. Shadowlands is a play that asks us to consider what we are willing to give up in order to gain so much.

The line that should linger with audiences is, "The pain now is part of the happiness then, that's the deal."

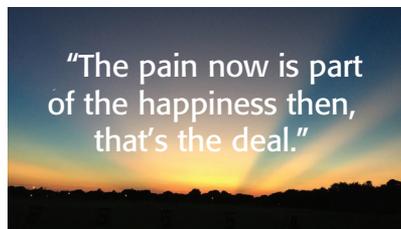

The Platonic idea of "Shadowlands" is explained this way in the play: "This world that seems to us so substantial is no more than the Shadowlands. Real life has not begun yet." As death looms over the characters in this play they speak of the contrast between our imperfect, shadowed human world and the bright, unfathomable realness of the afterlife. But one also comes to feel that Lewis was in a shadowlands of his own until Joy illuminated his life.

In the play (and in life) Lewis examines the age-old question of how God can allow suffering in the world. As we all struggle during a pandemic, we may be asking the same question. May the words of the play and Lewis' own wisdom and experience give us some strength in these times.

NOTE FROM THE ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

While experiencing a production by Fellowship for Performing Arts, some people become curious about what drives our work.

FPA's objective is to engage and entertain its patrons by telling stories from a Christian worldview that can capture the imagination of a diverse audience.

Our process begins with careful attention to selecting works we think can accomplish this objective. Shadowlands is a good example. It is an award-winning play with a gripping, yet humorous, story of love and loss, grief and doubt, and, ultimately, faith. It's been captivating audiences for nearly three decades.

We also strive to execute our artistic vision to the highest level of excellence our budgets allow. In this case that objective was executed by attracting a first-rate cast, production and creative team.

I'm aware that, despite the best of intentions, the notion of a "religious" play might send up a yellow flag.

During our first season in New York a few years back, several reviewers expressed this skepticism in print. One critic, upon discovering the worldview of the producers, wrote "my heart sank." Another made the understatement that presenting plays from a place of complete religious conviction "to a general audience is no easy thing."

In both cases, it was the work itself that turned them around. The first declared, "I expected a preachy bore, not this deliciously witty, theatrical treat that still resonates and amuses the day after." He went on, "I expect that, like the first, [the next production] will be entertaining, very well staged, canny and imbued with serious Christian thought and an earnest invitation to introspection."

The second critic began by stating that he was "Jewish by birth, liberal by conviction and an atheist by observation and introspection." He went on to express "how much I admire the approach of Fellowship for Performing Arts...They do their work through a careful combination of good storytelling—craft comes first...allowing any message implicit in the material to take care of itself."

A third critic commented that "Fellowship for Performing Arts offers something that has been sorely missing from the New York theater scene for far too long: high-quality, challenging theater from a Christian perspective. Most impressively...they let the drama lead the way, allowing us to debate what we have witnessed on the trip home."

Such feedback is reassuring. Art hints at the deeper structures of reality. FPA desires to create theatre that contributes to a better understanding of that reality. To do that requires honest, clear-eyed storytelling that entertains and engages its audiences. If a play doesn't do that, it really doesn't matter what else it does.

Thank you for the privilege of attempting to do just that at this performance.

Max McLean,
Founder and Artistic Director
Fellowship for Performing Arts
